UNDER TREATED FOR CANCER?

Macmillan Cancer Support is working on a national campaign which highlights some of the issues that older people face when having cancer treatment. There is a growing body of evidence to suggest that patients aged 70 and over are less likely to receive curative treatment than their younger counterparts.

To raise awareness of this issue, and influence health and social care providers, we are keen to speak to patients aged 70+, or carers of patients, who failed to receive the treatment they deserved due to age.
